Selden Chapin came to see me this morning and we discussed affairs in Holland, as well as what had [redacted] in the State Department during his recent stay in Washington.

Mr. Zeff called on me to invite me to a ball to be given by the British Legion at a restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne on March 14th. If I am here, I shall attend it. The British Ambassador and other members of the Diplomatic Corps will be present.

Marcel Boussac came to see me. He analyzed in his usual clear and concise manner what he considered to be French reaction to rearmament in Germany. We then talked about shooting and racing.

E. and I went to lunch at Pharamond in the market district of Paris. It was the first time I had been there for 25 years. We had a delicious lunch, cooked in the bourgeois fashion.

Jimmy Riddleberger came to see me regarding a number of matters of mutual interest to the Embassy and OSR.

Ambassador Eban, Iraeli Ambassador to the United States, called with one of his colleagues to discuss the alarm felt in Israel over unsettled conditions in the Arab world. He also asked me to help him in his attempt to make an appointment for General Eisenhower to see the Israeli Foreign Minister in Paris next week. This I have referred to Doug MacArthur.

M. Alexandre Kawalkowski, a former Polish Minister, whom I had known during the war, came in with a long article he has written about psychological warfare. I found him [redacted] interesting.

I met Jean Monnet at the house and we went over a number of the difficulties that confront our two countries in their mutual relations.
